

My family and I have just been alerted that the FCC is considering a proposal that would weaken Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. We STRONGLY urge that the FCC should not implement ANY proposal that would lessen the protections that we have enjoyed as a family under Indiana's Telephone Privacy law.

Thanks to Indiana's Telephone Privacy law we no longer have telemarketers calling us at all hours of the day and night, nagging us with useless and arcane pitches for mortgages, land, contributions for dubious charities, telephone calling plans, or cable television services to name just a few of the broad groups that would intrude into our private time at home.

I wish that a similar law could be put in place for SPAM! That is how wonderful this state legislation has been for us. When we lived in Maryland, up to two dozen phone calls a week were not uncommon. Since falling under Indiana's system we might get one call a month.

Please do not even consider any proposal that would lessen our state system.

Sincerely,

Len, Anne, Elizabeth, Kyle, Jennifer, and Scott Peruski
